Rupaboi, an eco-friendly wooden boathouse situated in the heart of serene beauty Tangua Haor, Sylhet, Bangladesh. Rupaboi the name itself came from a canal which not only reflects the local culture but also easy to pronounce by all. It's a one of a kind of business and pioneer, its journey started with four adventurous travel mates who visited the place as birdwatchers and fell in love with the experience and scenic beauty. They loved the experience so much; they were passionate to share the same experience with other fellow travelers.

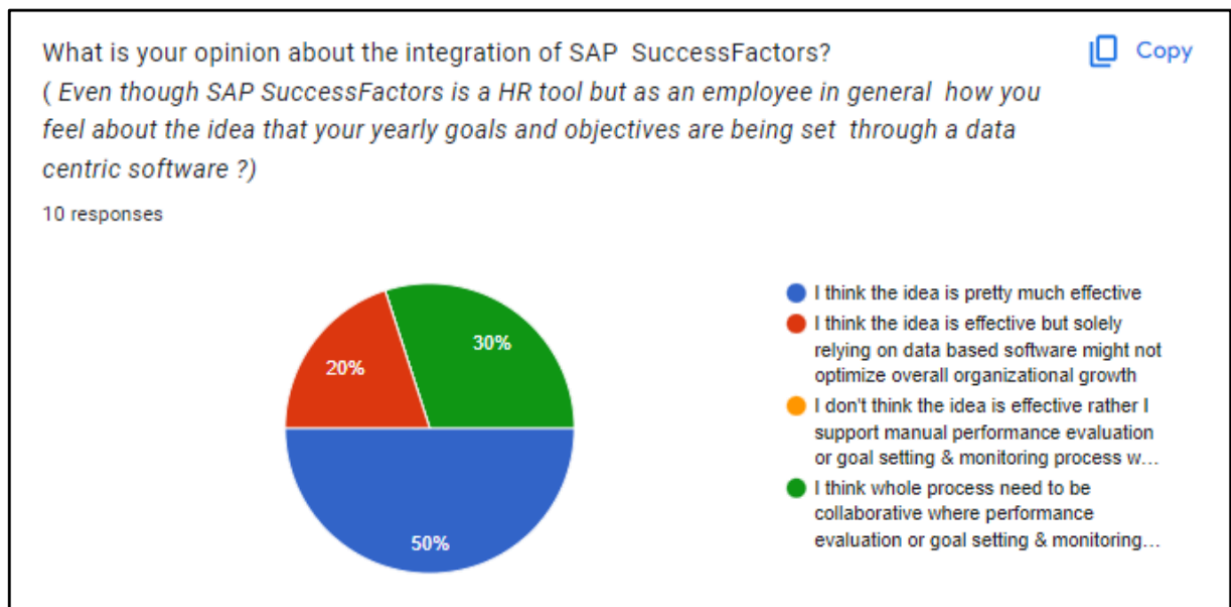

Tangua Haor is situated on Dharmapasha and Tahirpur upozilas of Sunamganj District in Bangladesh. It's renowned for its wetland ecosystem and came to the limelight during the early 2000s. Its home to 200 types of migrant birds in winter, its unobstructed view of Meghalaya Mountains, abundant of several types of fishes which is only found in the haor, rare plants like Hizol Bon which made the area a national treasure and a strong competitor of Sundarban as a tourist spot.

As the location is situated one side of the country, it takes more than 10 hours by road from Dhaka to reach to destination. Though the location is very scenic, being in a remote area has its own challenges. Unpredictable weather conditions, lack of sanitary and hygiene knowledge of the locals, designing the itinerary and making it sustainable and profitable were a huge challenge for the entrepreneurs. In-depth research, trial and errors and a significant capital for investment were implemented to make the project feasible.

Other than sustainability, Rupaboi also faced severe competition from the big corporate giants in the last few years. Several corporate giants invested in tourism business in Tangua Haor and offering similar services with more affordable prices. Marketing myopia and increasing competition were the reasons for the downfall of the business.
